UMBC ASIAN STUDIES PROGRAM
Spring 2013 Course Offerings

ASIA 300-01/THTR 470 – Japanese Performance Arts (combined class)
MW 1-2:15 p.m., Instructor: Alan Kreizenbeck
Drama Seminar: Japanese Performance Arts: An inquiry into various modes of Japanese performance, to include religious ceremonies, social events, and traditional and contemporary theatre and dance. Students will be asked to conduct independent research, and to present their findings through oral presentations, formal papers, and performance.

ASIA 300-02/MLL 327 Medieval Chinese Literature (combined class)
TuTh 1-2:15 p.m., Instructor: Dr. Anna Shields
This course is an introduction to important works of the classical literary tradition of China from the Zhou Dynasty (1045-221 BCE) through the Northern Song dynasty (976-1127 CE). In a chronological survey of the important writers of the early and medieval periods, the course tackles some fundamental questions of the Chinese literary tradition, including the meanings of the word that came to mean "literary writing," wen, and the place of wen in traditional Chinese culture; which genres of writing became the most prominent in the early tradition, and why; and the ways in which the scope of Chinese literature broaden and changed. The course is taught in English, with no knowledge of Chinese language required.

ASIA 300-03: Classics of Japanese Literature, Past and Present
Wed. 4:30-7:00 pm, Instructor: Dr. Leslie Winston
This course examines important works of Japanese literature that have withstood the test of time, from the Heian period (794-1185) to the modern, as well as popular contemporary works, including graphic fiction (manga). All readings will be in English translation.

ASIA 300-04/POLI 309: Korean Politics and International Relations (combined class)
TuTh 1-2:15 p.m., Instructor: Mr. David Walker
This course explores Korean politics and international relations, from Japan's colonization of Korea to the present day. Domestically, it examines the processes that led both to a richly democratic, culturally dynamic, and economically powerful South Korea, and to an impoverished, if militarily threatening, communist dynasty in North Korea. In terms of international relations, it focuses primarily on Japan's colonization of Korea, inter-Korean relations since World War Two, and Seoul's and Pyongyang's respective relations with China, Japan, and the US in the post-war era.
