

The Authors

Anissa Sorokin (Cohort 11) is currently working on her degree in Language, Literacy, and Culture (LLC) at the University of Maryland Baltimore County (UMBC). Her course of study focuses on ethnic identity development. In addition to her studies, Anissa works at the U.S. Census Bureau in the Statistical Research Division of the Language and Measurement Group.

Laura R. Strickling (Cohort 11) earned B.A. degrees in Art and Spanish, National Board Certification in World Languages, and an M.A. degree in Intercultural Communication. She currently teaches Spanish at UMBC and pursues her Ph.D. studies in LLC. Her research interests merge theoretical approaches to intercultural communication with language diversity programs in Baltimore schools.

Jeanine L. Williams (Cohort 10) holds a B.A. degree in Psychology, an M.S.Ed. in Human Development, and an Ed.S. in Education Policy. She is currently an Assistant Professor of reading at the Community College of Baltimore County and a faculty associate at The Johns Hopkins University Graduate School of Education. Jeanine's research focuses on critical literacy and college student persistence.

Kaye Wise Whitehead, Ph.D. (Cohort 9) graduated in 2009 from the LLC Program with a concentration in Black women's archival history and historical African American English. She is currently starting a position as an Assistant Professor of Communication at Loyola College in Maryland and is working on her first book, Emilie Davis: Her Life, In Her Own Words.