

Introduction to the Club Sports Program

UMBC offers a wide range of recreational and athletic activities, from individual fitness to intramural sports, to 19 Division I athletic teams. Sport clubs are an exciting option for students who want to learn a new sport or continue to test themselves in competition.

Participation in the UMBC Sport Club program is open to all UMBC students. One of the goals of each sport club is to generate interest in the sport. Clubs encourage new members, even those with little or no experience. Joining a sport club is a great way to polish skills or even learn a new sport. You will not only get to know other students but also get to interact with faculty advisors in settings far removed from the classroom.

While some sport clubs practice on a relaxed basis of once or twice a week, others seek to compete at the national level. Certified instructors and coaches work with these clubs to hone skills and build a competitive team. Through competition you will meet college students from a wide range of colleges and universities while testing your skills.

UMBC sport clubs do more than provide recreational and athletic activities. Students are active participants in the workings of their programs. From scheduling to by-laws to managing finances, students play a major role in making the UMBC Sport Club program successful. Sport club members work closely with faculty, university officials and the Student Government Association. The Sport Club Council, made up of a representative from each sport club, provides another opportunity to develop leadership skills.
