RATIONALE FOR CHANGE:

The Department of History wants to change several 400-level courses to the 300 level. The change is also part of a larger department strategy to offer chronologically based courses at the 300 level and focus on topic based writing and research intensive courses at the 400-level. In addition, the department's internal assessment completed last year suggested that majors needs more 300-level courses as a bridge from lower level classes (100 and 200) to 400-level courses. This is already the pattern for the department's non-US offerings. This request, along with other courses being submitted to the UGC from the Department of History this month, will make the American side of department offerings reflect the same pedagogical strategy as the non-US courses.
