As of 2003, the yellow regions on the map approximate the geographic range of West Nile virus. At this time, the virus had appeared on every continent except for Antarctica. Because this virus is relatively new to the United States (1999), it has become a topic of concern for many of its citizens.